But where there are prophecies, they will cease; where there are tongues, they will be stopped; where there isit will pass. Because we know in part and properly prophesize, but when the completeness arrives, what is partly disappears. In the KJV, the languages à ¢ â, ¬ "Cessando ... in other words, at some point after Paul wrote 1 Corinthians, the gift of languages would no longer be in use. The first Corinthians 12 Å ¢ â, ¬ "14 It's all about the correct use of spiritual gifts. Paolo writes to the Corinthians that put on some of the gifts more Å ¢ ¬ Å "Spectacular". Just in the middle of his discussion, he speaks of the superior quality of the Love. Although the Corinthian church was very gifted, they were not using their gifts in love will never fail. The question with which many struggles with is only when these gifts will cease. Paolo gives the answer in the text: à ¢ â,¬ When you arrive the completeness ... (1 Corinthians 13:10). The next question, of course, is what is à ¢ â,¬ ¢ â,¬ , is that the gift gifts were only in operation during the apostolic era to give a special revaluation up to the Completion of the New Testament. Before the first Christians they had to rely on words of knowledge, prophecy and languages to give them the full revelation of God. Once the church had completely possessed the New Testament (completeness), these gifts faded As useless. Faith, hope and love continue to be in operation. Often, the vision of the cessationist will underline that the words used for the cessation of knowledge and prophecy are in the passive voice, indicating that they will be stopped by an external force. However, the verb used for termination of languages is in the average item, which indicates that it will cease $\tilde{A} \notin \hat{a}$, \neg "of them them". This is usually seen as a further proof that the languages were temporary and eventually passing alone. Regardless of the strength of this topic, grammatical analysis leaves something. Some verbs normally take the average voice, and the verb has translated $\tilde{A} \notin \hat{a}$, $\neg \tilde{A}$ "Be slied" in NIV is one of them; therefore, there is no particular meaning for passive change to the average voice in this Passage. to Luca 8:24 The storm is à ¢ â, ¬ Å "Stilled" (same word and voice); However, it is clear that Jesus has actively stopping the storm. Even the cessationists stress that, if languages, prophecy and knowledge continue, this continuous revelation would be in effect add to Scripture. However, most Continantians (who hold on the current exercise of these gifts) do not see their revelations as peer with writing, but more like Å ¢ â,¬ Å "Loldà ¢ â,¬ them to do something or the spirit.ã," Many pessengi feel God led them to do something or â,¬ Å "Loldà ¢ â,¬ them to do something. They would have argued that this was a sort of communication from God but it would never ever equal with Scripture. The other primary vision is that "completeness" is the eternal state. At that moment there will no longer be need for miraculous gifts like languages, because we will know everything fully. This vision points to verse 12 as further description of the "completeness": «For now we see only a reflection as in a mirror; Then we'll see face to face. Now I know in part; then I will fully known." This cannot relate to the completion of the New Testament canon. The point of Paul seems to be that languages, prophecies and words of knowledge will not be necessary when we enter into the eternal state. The continuationist position does not exclude the possibility that the need for the most miraculous gifts can flow depending on the canon is complete. There are good historical and theological arguments to support the cessationist position, but are not necessarily cease.[~Â +Â object]We accept to cease hostilities [~Â +Â verb-ing]They have ceased temporarily to fight.[~Â +Â +Â verb] His fortune never ceases to amaze me. no.
