him in spotlights half-tracks at strategic cross-roads, main gate, and at the chapel. The chapel tower, incidentally, was checked for snipers just prior to the ceremony.

The procession formed at the main gate and moved in the direction indicated by arrows in the attached sketch. 100 displaced persons from a nearby camp led off with their various national colors. They were followed by Col Hill and his party of two other colonels, a major, an interpreter and myself. After came about 900 German civilians. Among these were represented the City Government, the Chamber of Commerce, and other civic organizations. The Director of Ludwig University, Dr. Schumann of the Thomas Church, and other city officials also attended. They were all dressed in top hats and long frock coats.

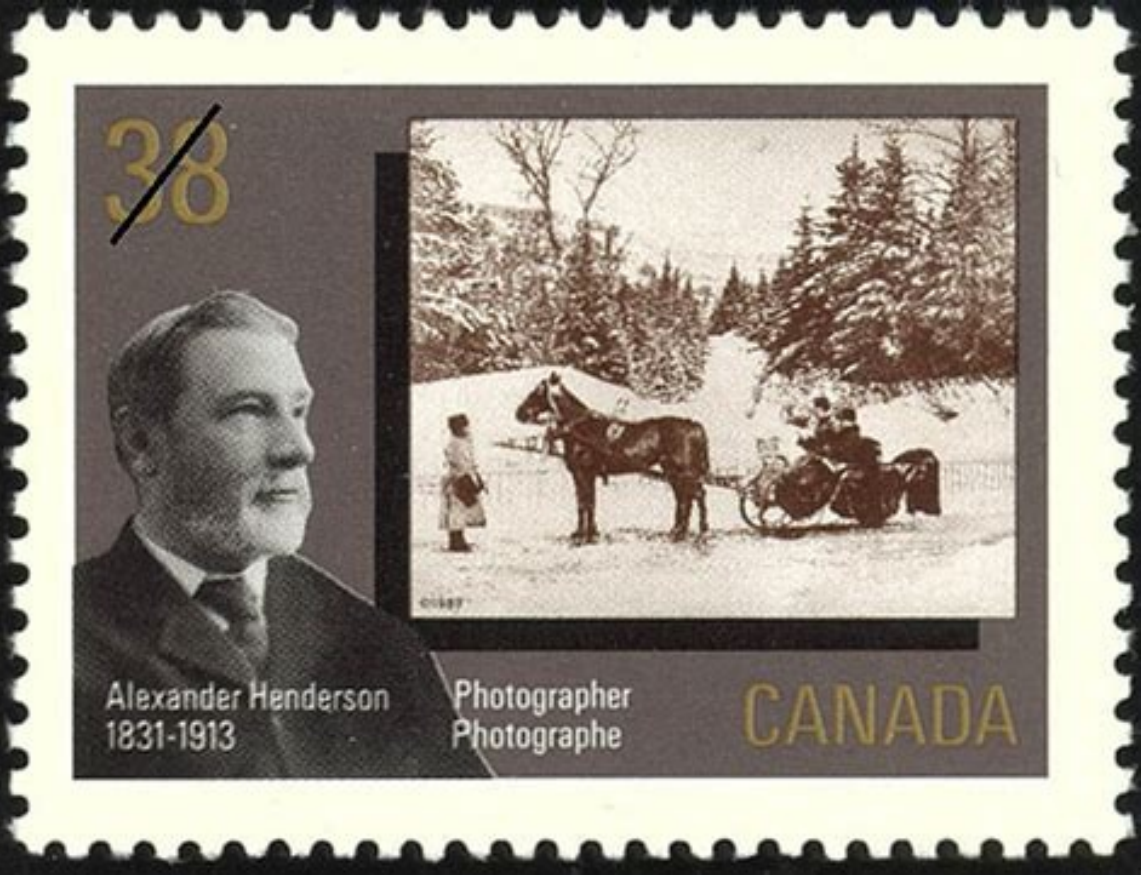

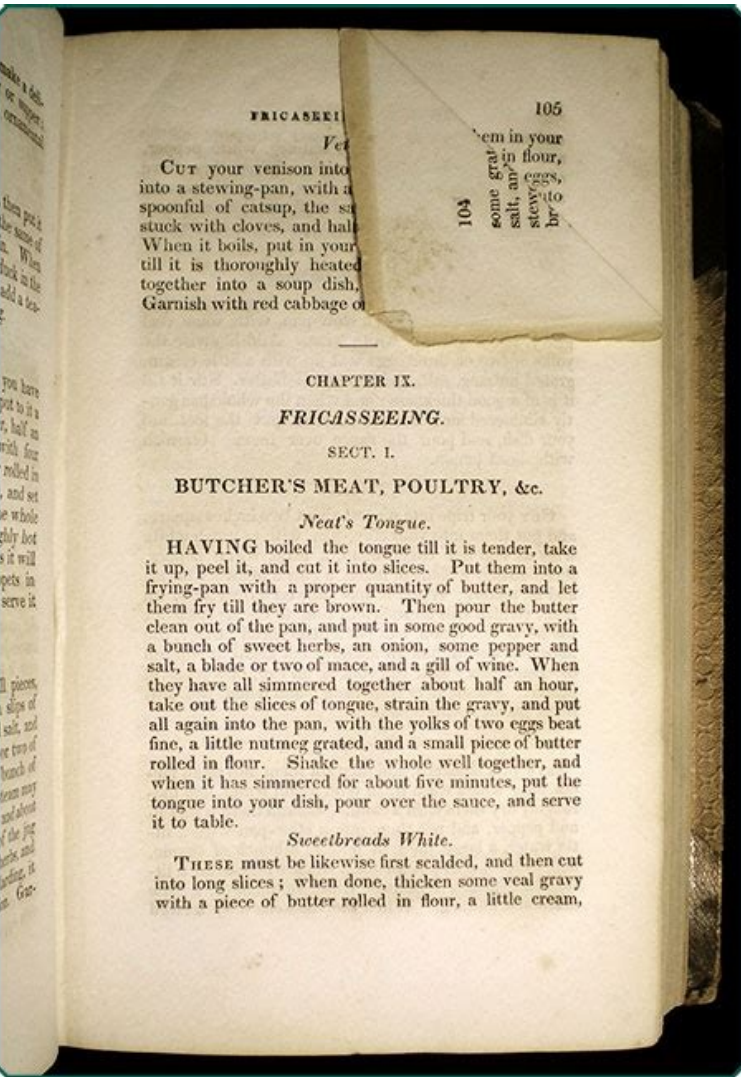

The mass burial services within the chapel were simple but impressive. 10
The Catholic, Jewish and Protestant services were conducted by Chaplains Charles V. McGowan of 190th FA Group, Goldstein of V Corps, and W.E. McCrory of the 190th FA Group, respectively. As a fitting close, taps were blown by a bugler standing before the chapel. After the ceremony, the displaced persons filled around the caskets and placed additional flowers upon them.

After the procession had moved out, the caskets were lowered into the graves and the dirt replaced by civilian laborers. Instructions were given to the cemetery director that the crosses were to be spaced equally and that they would be lined up laterally and lengthwise.

Later in talking with Chaplain McCrory it developed that he had to make a report for the General. I drew up a hasty sketch for him, similar to the one attached herewith.

Having completed my work and there being nothing further in which I could be of assistance, I checked out with Col Hill and reported back to my unit.
