GIFs wrap communication up in delight — and often, humor — which make them the perfect vehicle for expressing what is tricky to say in plain words. Since 2016, the artists and designers at GIPHY Studios have created thousands of GIFs and stickers to help people all over the world do just this. Here, we'll look at the most popular ways people have expressed themselves using GIPHY, including the top search modifiers and the most popular* Studios Originals GIFs. With Spring weather and a massive vaccination effort underway in the U.S., it seems that people are getting comfortable with going out and saying hello to new and old friends. The most common terms people search on GIPHY for visual ways to greet each other are usually "hi" "hi there" "hai" "howdy" "hola" "hey" "hey girl" "hello" "yo" "sup" and "howdy" — a little bit of something for everyone! Let's look at how specifically people have chosen to say these things through GIFs and GIPHY Clips so far this year. Here are the Top 10 Studios Originals GIFs and GIPHY Clips tagged with "Hi" or "hello", starting with the most used.

"It opens up people to start more conversations and to break the ice." The popular dating app, which boasts over 100 million downloads, introduced a GIF button to its compose field in late January, offering potential swipers a searchable database of GIFs sourced from Giphy, a GIF search engine. 20 million GIFs have been sent on Tinder so far, the company said. Anyone who's spent time using an online dating app knows why GIFs are so effectively sparking connections. After a match is made on one of these apps, there's often an awkward moment where two complete strangers don't know what to say. Despite a clear mutual attraction, the interaction often starts with clunky first messages such as "sup" and "hi, how are you?" In other words: romance online often begins with a whimper. While GIFs certainly aren't a cure all for the pitfalls of online courtship, they do offer a means of making early interactions a little less awkward. A well-placed GIF might add some levity to an otherwise clunky introduction, or at the very least give you a better opener than "hi." Inevitably, when your conversation hits a lull, an expertly-curated GIF could be just the thing to guide your flirtations back on track. Didn't hear back after asking for a date?
