It used to be that if you needed to find a phone number, you picked up the phone book for your area and thumbed through the listings until you found what you needed. These days, those phone books exist in a much smaller format, and in most places include only landline phone numbers or even only business phone numbers. There are plenty of reasons you might need to find someone's phone number. Maybe you've lost an old friend's contact information, you're getting calls from a number you don't recognize, or you wrote down a number but forgot to provide context. From general search engines to more obscure (and focused) websites like Zabasearch, the websites on this list will help you find a phone number for free. A simple search with a generalized search engine like Google, Bing, or DuckDuckGo may even be able to track down a name, address, email address, and recent personal updates, all in the same place. To find someone's phone number on Google, for example, you may need to do some digging by entering their name and the area they live in. But to do a reverse number lookup, all you need to do is enter the entire phone number (area code included) into the search field, and see what comes back. In most cases, the number will be identified within the first five search results. Select one of these results, and you'll see business information, addresses, relevant contacts, and more. Toll-free phone numbers are free to call and can be your instant gateway into a company's inner workings. There are quite a few toll-free number directories on the web that give extensive 1-800 number listings; however, you can also use your favorite search engine to track down nearly any toll-free phone number. There are a couple of different ways you can accomplish this: 800 number for company: Simple yet effective. Type 800 number for company, substituting the name of the business you're looking for the word "company", and sometimes you'll get lucky.Contact us: This is often a very successful method of finding contact information. Type "contact us" (yes, in quotes) plus the name of the company (e.g., "contact us" microsoft). Millions of people all over the world use cell phones on a daily basis to communicate with each other. However, most of these numbers aren't found in phone directories, which makes them difficult to track down online. However, you can potentially uncover a friend's mobile phone number with nothing more than a simple name search. Niche search engines focus on something other than regular web page searches, such as finding only people-related information. These sites can be useful resources for when you're looking for a phone number because they look at only information that could be tied to individuals, such as a number, an address, social networking updates, and business contact resources. Since every search engine returns different information from the next, it's definitely worth a try to type your person's name or phone number into various search tools, such as a people search engine, to see what comes back. If you've ever placed personal information anywhere on the web, whether that be a phone number, birthdate, or physical address, Zabasearch is likely to have it. Controversial yet completely legal, this site collects information from all over the web and places it in one convenient place for public access, including some phone numbers. Search by name or address and see what comes back. If you know their phone number, you can find people that way, too. Using just a name, an email address, or a common connection (like a workplace, college, or organization), you can uncover a surprising amount of information at Facebook, the world's largest social networking website with hundreds of millions of users. There are many ways to find people on Facebook, and depending on how public people have made their personal information, you can actually be quite successful finding a phone number here. There are a wide variety of specialized phone directories on the web, but not all of them are reliable, trustworthy, or even safe to use. Some examples of free phone number finders that are useful whether you're trying to find someone's phone number or you're looking at who owns a particular number, include TruePeopleSearch, Whitepages, and Spy Dialer. FAQ How do I track someone's location with a phone number? The easiest way is to use the native mobile phone locator that comes with your Android or iOS device. Android devices use Find My Device which is tied to your Google account. iPhones use Find My iPhone which is factory installed. How do I block a phone number on my mobile device? To block calls on iOS phones, tap the i next to the phone number then select Block this Caller. For Android devices, open the Phone app, then select the number to block. Tap Block number or Reject call. Thanks for letting us know! Get the Latest Tech News Delivered Every Day Subscribe Tell us why! For those who need to go online on their Chromebook via a mobile phone, there's some good news in that Google is expanding the Chromebook's Instant Tethering feature beyond just its own smartphones.Instant Tethering means supported Chromebooks can automatically and seamlessly switch to use your phone's data connection when you're out and about, and need to get online, but there's no Wi-Fi in the vicinity. It's currently only supported with Google's own Nexus and Pixel handsets.However, support on the phone front is expanding, according to a report from Android Police (opens in new tab), with several readers using OnePlus and Samsung Android devices getting in touch to say that Instant Tethering now works for them - albeit in testing on the Beta or Dev versions of Chrome OS.The tech site observes that they couldn't get it working on the Dev build of Chrome OS, so this could just be rolling out to a limited number of select users or those with particular device/hardware configurations at the moment.But the point is, it's a pretty good sign that expanded support is coming. Although there are no guarantees at this stage, as ever with features in testing; they can get dropped.Currently, Instant Tethering is only supported by Google's smartphones, as we mentioned, meaning specifically the Pixel, Pixel XL, Pixel 2/2 XL, Pixel 3/3 XL, Nexus 5X, Nexus 6P or Nexus 6.The other requirements include running Android 7.1 or better, and obviously you need tethering enabled on your mobile data plan (and Bluetooth turned on). Both the Chromebook and phone must be signed in to the same Google account, too.Google first introduced Instant Tethering to Chromebooks back in 2017, with the feature initially spotted in June of that year, and it has subsequently rolled out to more and more notebooks as time has progressed.Hopefully, then, it won't be long before we see an equivalent expansion on the phone front for the release version of Chrome OS. Everyone is just so social these days, aren't they? So, what would happen if Ma Bell hooked up with Facebook? Their issue would probably look a lot like Ring Plus, a new IP phone service that's essentially your telephone on Web 2.0.Entirely ad-supported, Ring Plus encourages fraternization among members who can view each others' profiles and photos and interact by e-mail or phone. Besides your Facebook-like profile, your Ring Plus web page includes your contacts, e-mail and voice-mail inboxes, search, reminders, tagged sharing for photos and videos, and the ability to invite friends into your circle.
